

About ISS: RC: 25: Sociology of Sports

Sociology of Sports was warranting a beginning in the field of Sociology in India for long. Despite the potential of sport development to highlight broader social complexities, Sociologists in India remain disinterested in the area (and sport generally) as avenues of legitimate study. Yet, sport development programs provide Sociologists opportunities to know and engage with body politics, questions of structure & agency, social transformation and sustainable livelihood. Much work in this area has been done in many other parts of the globe, but here (with due regards to one and all), to repeat, Sociologists seem to be somewhat disinclined. Therefore, the complex nature of the relationship between youth sports and their personal growth cannot be captured by using just one kind of data or one set of statistics. A large number of studies necessitate commentary, in addition to evidence-based research.
